

Anita Price Roth

Anita Price Roth has lived and worked around the world. No matter where she finds herself, she has always focused her efforts on making life better for children and communities in need.

After graduating with highest honors from The University of California at Berkeley where she majored in sociology, Anita embarked on journeys that would take her and her family to live in Namibia, Fiji, and the Micronesian Islands before returning to the United States. In each country Anita has quickly become a leader in the philanthropic and civic life of the community - primarily focused on children's health and education.

Anita is also an entrepreneur and owns her own confectionery and candle business in her current home State of Vermont where she lives with her husband David and two teenage daughters. When not working to build her business, raise her children or volunteer her time in service to children, Anita can be found in the garden or in her art studio putting her creative energies to work coaxing delicious vegetables out of the ground or painting beautiful portraits of her gorgeous daughters.

Anita is especially proud to support Chance4all and their dedicated team serving young people who, despite having to overcome tremendous obstacles, are blazing a trail for a better future for their own families, their community and all of Zambia.
